Working four days a week and get paid the same.

✓ In Iceland, it has been an 'overwhelming success' with employees switching to work for fewer hours without affecting their productivity.

✓ A study was conducted between 2015 and 2019 in the Iceland national government and capital Reykjavik's Capital City Council, part of which over 2500 workers--about 1% of the Nordic nation's working population--were paid the same as before but for fewer hours in duty, the British broadcaster reported.

✓ As productivity levels could be managed with rearranged shifts, junking unnecessary tasks, evolving methods to complete task with greater speed, reducing length of meetings and in some cases replacing meetings with e-mails.

✓ The Schedule is starting with pre-schools, offices, hospitals, social service providers.

✓ Benefitting workers with less stress, overall health, time for hobbies and household chores and better work-life balance.
